

Imagine you are going to start a business in your classroom to raise money, selling to people outside of the class. Develop a business plan and present it to the class. Here are some of the things your plan must include:

- What are you going to sell?
- How much will it cost you to get or make the thing you are going to sell?
- How much will you sell it for?
- How much profit per item will that make?
- How much time will it take to make or get the thing you are going to sell?
- How much time will it take to sell the item?
- Who will probably be the buyers?
- How many buyers are there probably going to be?
- How many of the things do you think will be sold?
- How much profit will you get?
- How long will it take to get that profit?
- What will you use the money for?

You will probably want a model of the product to show the class. If you really think that it will sell, and the class agrees to participate, you might consider actually carrying out your plan.
